Ethnic Group and Mother Tongue in the Ethiopian Censuses of 1994 and 2007

GROVER HUDSON, Michigan State University, East Lansing

The Ethiopian census of 2007 (POPULATION CENSUS COMMISSION 2007) provides information on ethnic groups (Table 3.1, pp. 98–122) and mother tongues (Table 3.2, pp. 123–148), as did the census of 1994 (POPULATION CENSUS COMMISSION 1994; HUDSON 2003; 2004). We read (POPULATION CENSUS COMMISSION 2007: 96) that “Detailed lists of the names & codes of the country’s languages were provided to the enumerators in their instruction manuals. Similar types of questions were used for both the 1994 & 2007 censuses, except that during the 1994 census [a] question about the most frequently used additional language of respondents was also asked in addition to mother tongue & ethnic group”.

Presented here in four tables are comparisons of the “country total” census results for 2007 and 1994 concerning ethnic group and mother tongue of respondents, with attention to differences between the two censuses and within each census between ethnic groups and mother tongues (ethnic groups without mother tongues and vice versa). Some of the differences can be explained with reasonable confidence but some only as suppositions; some remain unexplained. (The census also provides results by Regions: Təgray; ʿAfar; Amhara; Oromia; Somali; Beniṣangul-Gumuz; Southern Nations, Nationalities, and Peoples (SNNP); Gambella; Harari; Addis Abāba; Dərre Dawa; and (sic) “Region 17”.)

The 2007 census reported two ethnic groups without associated mother tongues (Mejenger, Silte; s. notes 27, 34), and 5 mother tongues without an associated ethnic group (Demegna, Felashigna, Koyrigna, Shetagna, Shitagna; s. notes 6, 10, 21, 32, 33). The 1994 census reported 3 ethnic groups without an associated mother tongue (Felasha, Werji, Weyito; s. notes 10, 36, 37).

The 2007 census reported 85 Ethiopian ethnic groups vs. 80 of the 1994 census, and the 2007 census reported 87 Ethiopian mother tongues vs. 77 of the 1994 census. It is not possible to list with complete confidence those ethnic groups and mother tongues which appear in one of the two censuses and not the other, because ethnic-group and mother-tongue names in the two censuses differ, and only some of these differences can be resolved as synonymous names. The Encyclopaedia Aethiopica now provides a single comprehensive source where many of these problems of name-matching can be solved, but questions remain, including the persistent difficulty concerning differences between names of languages and their dialects, and between self-names and names, often thought derogatory, given by others. Of course even the notions “ethnic group”, “mother tongue” or “language” are not well defined, but are non-discrete entities, and the facts which, in particular cases, would give them clarity if not satisfactory definition are many and probably impossible to elicit in a census.

The Ethiopian census seems not trying to identify and count all Ethiopian ethnic groups and mother tongues, or even a well-defined subgroup of these. The apparent absence of expert advice in these matters (or at least in the census reporting) is understandable, given the certain difficulties of choosing among experts, interpreting the advice (probably often contradictory), and implementing it. Certainly also, there is much of value in the census data to intrigue and challenge us, and, in the case of ethnic groups and mother tongues with small populations in 1994 and absent in 2007, to alarm.

In the tables below, ethnic-group and mother-tongue names are given as these appear in the two censuses, but in the alphabetical order of ethnic-group names of the 2007 census, although with alphabetization and a few spellings corrected. Different but presumed synonymous names of the 1994 and 2007 census are provided in the row of the name in the 2007 census, for example Berta and Jebelawi. In all four tables, the parentheses after some names of the 1994 census are the first letters of the wider group under which, in the 1994 census, the name was listed as a subgroup, for example Alaba (Kemb), showing that in the 1994 census Alaba was listed as a subgroup under Kembata.

Table 1 is a comparison of ethnic groups and mother tongues in the two censuses. In the column of ethnic groups, a code identifies the language family of each ethnic group: C: Cushitic, N: Nilo-Saharan, O: Omotic, S: Semitic, and ?: unknown or uncertain; an example of the latter is Guagul/Guagugna. To the extent possible, notes to Table 1 attempt to explain differences between the lists of ethnic groups and mother tongues in the two censuses. Table 2 contrasts only those cases in which the two censuses appear to report different ethnic groups and languages. Table 3 presents ethnic groups and populations of the two censuses, and Table 4 mother tongues and populations of the two censuses. In Tables 3 and 4 every tenth ethnic group and mother tongue is numbered so that the number of ethnic groups and mother tongues in the two censuses can be compared.

The numbers for total population at the top of Tables 3 and 4 show that total Ethiopian population increased by over twenty million from 1994 to 2007, or 38 %, and such increase, often greater, is apparent for most of the ethnic groups and mother tongues counted in the census. Unaccountably, in the 1994 census the total of ethnic group members is 53,132,276 but of mother-tongue speakers 53,130,779.

Notes

1. Another name for, or a subgroup of, Kwegu/Koyego (HIROSHI 2007: 464); s. notes 14, 20.
2. Perhaps Banna; s. MASUDA 2003: 466, where estimated population is 20,000.
3. Jebelawi or Berta, the former “not a name they themselves prefer” (ABBINK 2003: 547).
4. Perhaps Birale/Ongata, according to TOSCO 2010: 29, a language “spoken by a handful of elders”.
5. Self-name Dawro (AZEB AMHA 2007b: 447). “Kullo ... is a derogatory term for the Omotic-speaking Dawro” (BUSTORF 2007: 449). “Dawro were formerly known under the name of Kullo, which is now rejected” (DATA DEA 2005: 115).
6. Perhaps an alternate spelling of Dimegna and wrongly counted separately in the census.
7. Presumably Diraašša (HAYWARD 2005: 167).
8. “The Donga constitute nine peasant associations of the Kačabirra wärāda in the present zone of Kambaata–Alaaba–T̄imbaaro ... Their first language is Kambaata, but many of them also speak the Hadiyya language” (BRAUKÄMPER 2005: 191).
9. A North Omoto variety close to Gamo and Malo (AZEB AMHA 2005: 195); perhaps merged with Gamo in the 2007 census.
10. The Felasha, or Betā Israel, are speakers of an Agāw variety, probably Kemant or Qwara (APPLEYARD 2003: 140).
11. “Gamila” a Berta subgroup (BENDER 1971: 220).
12. Ganḡule, a “Harro” dialect (BENDER 2005: 1037; POISSONNIER 2005: 1038), others of which are Gidiččo, Gašame (Kechama), and Harro.
13. Presumably Gidiččo, a “Harro” dialect (BENDER 2005: 1037), s. note 12.
14. HUDSON 2004: 168, speculated an equation with Kwegu, which seems to appear otherwise in the 2007 census: Koyego; s. notes 1, 20.
15. As understood by the census, “Guragie” (Gurage) peoples speak three or more languages: at least so-called “Northern Gurage” Soddo and its dialects, “Western Gurage” dialects such as Chaha, and “Eastern Gurage” dialects such as Silte (Səlti) (GOLDENBERG 2005: 925). Even if the 2007 census now counts Silte separately (s. note 32), there remain “Eastern Gurage” varieties Welane and Zay. There are probably other cases in which the census counts multiple groups and languages as one, e.g. Welaytta, Gamo.
16. “The Irob are the only Saho living in Ethiopia” (VOIGT 2007: 187).
17. Karo of Eastern Omotic is “mutually intelligible with Banna” (BENDER 1971: 221); s. note 2.
18. The Kemant (language Kəmantnäy) are mostly now speakers of Amharic (ZELEALEM LEYEW 2007: 383).
19. Also known as Koorete and Koyra (AZEB AMHA 2007a: 429).
20. Perhaps Kwegu: Koegu, K<sup>w</sup>egu, K<sup>w</sup>oygi (HIEDA 2007: 463); s. notes 1 and 14.
21. Perhaps an alternate spelling of Koregna and wrongly counted separately in the census.
22. One of the “main divisions” of Konso (WOLDE GOSSA TADESSE 2007: 426).
23. A “Western Nilotic” language (DIMMENDAAL 2007: 1185) of Sudan and W. Ethiopia.
24. Also written Mašolle; a “Konsoid” (MOUS 2005: 428) variety of the “Dullay dialect cluster” (SAVÀ 2005: 204).
25. Melo or Malo; a North Omoto variety close to Gamo (AZEB AMHA 2007d: 710), with which it is perhaps merged in the 2007 census. Not to be confused with Maale, or Malie of the census (AZEB AMHA 2007c: 607).

26. Also Majang, Mesengo; self-name Maḡangir (UNSETH 2007a: 627; 2007b: 629); the census reports no speakers of Mejengerigna, which is therefore omitted in Table 4. Perhaps speakers of Mejengerigna are included as Mesengogna; s. note 27.
27. Another name for Mejenger, according to UNSETH 2007b: 629.
28. A “Surmic” language (UNSETH 2007c: 1076).
29. Gašame/Kechama; one of the “Harro” dialects. “There are many variant spellings, e.g. Kačama ... for Gašame” (BENDER 2005: 1037).
30. Kwama (SIEBERT – BRYANT 2007: 460).
31. Šakačo is “closely related to Kāfa ... the name Moča is seen as derogatory” (HAASNOOT 2010: 481).
32. Absent in the 1994 census, “Shetagna” has neither ethnic group nor speakers in the 2007 census, and is therefore omitted in Tables 3 and 4.
33. A Nilo-Saharan people of the Sudan (BENDER 1975: 63); the 1994 census reported 307 ethnic-group members and 301 mother-tongue speakers. Surely mistakenly, the 2007 census reported 880,818 Shitagna speakers, a number reasonably that for Siltigna; s. note 34.
34. Silte appears as an ethnic group in the 2007 census, with 934,891 members, but unaccountably without mother-tongue speakers. Silte did not appear in the 1994 census, in which presumably its ethnic-group members and mother-tongue speakers were included in the “Guragie/Guragigna” count. In a 2001 referendum the Silte people “voted overwhelmingly in favour of declaring themselves a distinct ‘nationality’ or ethnic group”, an outcome which seemed to have been accepted by the government (SMITH 2007: 575; BUSTORF 2010: 607). It seems likely that the 880,818 mother-tongue speakers reported in the 2007 census for Shitagna should have been reported for Siltigna; s. note 33.
35. Probably Opuuo, a Nilo-Saharan “Koman” people (BENDER 2010: 33).
36. An ethnic group not known to have an associated language, until the 2007 census reported 2,037 Werjigna speakers (CERULLI 1930: 14; QUIRIN 2010).
37. Presumably Wāyto (ZERIHUN ABEBE 2010: 1162); cf. Waata (KELLNER 2010).
38. A dialect of “Zayse” (BENDER 1971: 226).
39. An Eastern Sudanic language (BENDER 1971: 226).

Summary

Results for ethnic groups and mother tongues of the 1994 and 2007 Ethiopian census are presented and compared. There are ethnic groups without mother tongues and mother tongues without ethnic groups. Names of ethnic groups and mother tongues differ in the two censuses, and only some of the differences are explained as synonymous names. Some of the differences remain unexplained, and some of the names are unidentified. In one case, Səlti, the census seems to have attributed its speakers to another, unrecognized group. The census reports 38 % total Ethiopian population growth from 1994 to 2007, and comparable increase is generally apparent for all but a few groups listed. Some groups with small populations in 1994 do not reappear 2007.
