Editorial

The present issue of AETHIOPICA, like the preceding one, is partly monographic, with a section containing the proceedings of the Panel on Islamic Literature in Ethiopia: New Perspectives of Research, from the ‘19th International Conference of Ethiopian Studies’, held in Warsaw, Poland, on 24–28 August 2015.

Starting from this issue, the annual bibliography on Ethiopian Semitic and Cushitic linguistics held from its inception in 1998 for eighteen years by Rainer Voigt is handed over, on Voigt’s own will, to a pool of younger scholars, with the substantial support of the AETHIOPICA editorial team. I would like on this occasion to express the deep gratitude of the editorial board of AETHIOPICA and of all scholars in Ethiopian Semitic and Cushitic linguistics to Rainer Voigt for his fundamental and valuable contribution.

Reviews

The text is edited with accuracy: misprints are scarce (e.g., p. 8.3: አብጠም instead of አብጠምመ; p. 27.13: የአማካት instead of የአምኑት; p. 33.18 and 33.21: አፌላት and አፌልት instead of አፌላት and አፌልት respectively; p. 39.21: አነድ instead of አነዥ; p. 49.21: አሰጣጥ instead of አሰጣጥ; p. 54.6: አሰጣጥ instead of ተሰጣጥ). The emendation of አግባቃቄሁ ‘intestines’ into አግባቃቄሁ (p. 54.11) seems unnecessary: the word is attested in the dictionaries. The translation is likewise accurate and misprints are of very minor significance, e.g.: p. 13, n. 56: ‘Həllawəyat’ instead of ‘Həlluna’; p. 15.4: ‘Mdähən’ instead of ‘Mädhən’; p. 27.14: ‘lived’ instead of ‘lives’. Biblical quotations and allusions are detected throughout. Among the non-biblical sources references are made to Päntälewon of the cell (tr. p. 31, n. 102), the Martyrs of Nagran (tr. p. 68.14–15), ዕምሬያስ (tr. p. 68.22), and Peter Archbishop of Alexandria (tr. p. 69, n. 236).

In conclusion, scholars can be sincerely grateful to Getatchew Haile for presenting a new historical source that opens new possibilities for our understanding of an indisputably intriguing chapter of medieval Ethiopia.

GETATCHEW HAILE, Voices from Däbrä Zämäddo: Acts of Abba Bärtälomewos and Abba Yohannəs. 45 Miracles of Mary, Aethiopistische Forschungen, 79 (Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz Verlag, 2013). xii, 273 pp., index. Price: € 64.00. ISBN: 978-3-447-10068-7.

With his first publication in the series Aethiopistische Forschungen Getatchew Haile offers an edition and an annotated translation of the unpublished hagiographical texts (Lives and hymns) of St Bärtälomewos and St Yohannəs, two abbots of the famous monastery of Däbrä Zämäddo,<sup>1</sup> Lasta, Ethiopia, who lived during the first half of the fourteenth century (St Bärtälomewos) and the second half of the fifteenth century (St Yohannəs); i.e. Part One of the book. In Part Two, the author provides the edition and translation of forty-five local miracles worked by St Mary, mainly for the different members of the community of Däbrä Zämäddo (during the tenures of various abbots) but also at neighbouring places (e.g. in the region of Šemrätä <sup>1</sup> The monastery with its rock-hewn church is also known as Čämäddo (p. 1), and Žämmädu Maryam or Čämmadu Maryam (‘Žämmädu Maryam’, EAe, V (2014), 133a–135b (E. Balicka-Witakowska)). According to the Gädlä Bärtälomewos (ed. p. 21, tr. pp. 147, 148), the monastic community of Zämäddo was founded by Bärtälomewos (who placed the tabot of St Mary in the cave), and the church was constructed ‘in form of a cross’ during the tenure of Yohannəs. For the construction date of the church see also ibid. 134b.

Ab).<sup>2</sup> Since all works contain several historical episodes, e.g. concerning the foundation and construction of the monastery and its church, the material presented is fascinating not only for the study of the literary genre as such but also extremely valuable for the reconstruction of monastic history.

The introduction to the edition (pp. 1–10) and to the translation (pp. 115–135) includes a brief description of the manuscripts used, an informative introduction to the monastery and the protagonists of the hagiographies, and, finally, an insightful discussion supplied with rare textual material on the veneration of St Mary in the Ethiopian Orthodox Täwahedo Church. The work is completed with an index of proper names (pp. 267–273).

Both hagiographies, the Gädlä Bärtälomewos and the Gädlä Yohannəs, each with a collection of miracles (Tä'ammor), are preserved together in three manuscripts along with other texts. These multiple-text manuscripts, all originating in Däbrä Zämäddo, were once microfilmed by the Ethiopian Manuscript Microfilm Library as MSS EMML nos 6975, 6843, 7064 (MSS A, B, C in the edition).<sup>3</sup> The edited hymns (sälam and mälkə) devoted to St Bärtälomewos are transmitted in MSS A and C; MS EMML no. 6993 (MS D), containing a collection of mälkə hymns devoted to various saints (Mälkə'a Guba'e), is the only known codex containing the edited Mälkə'a Yohannəs.<sup>4</sup> The forty-five miracles of St Mary, edited in Part Two, are transmitted in a codex microfilmed as MS EMML no. 6835 (MS E) which contains a huge collection of the ‘Miracles of Mary’ (Tä'ammorä Maryam). In line with the author’s editing method employed in his many previous works, the oldest MS A (dated to the sixteenth century on palaeographical grounds) served as the basis for the edition of the hagiographies.

The Gädlä Bärtälomewos, followed by two miracles performed after the saint’s death (ed. pp. 13–26, tr. pp. 137–154), provides only a few biographical data on its protagonist. The text, significantly a first-person narrative, basically offers a stereotyped portrait of a holy monk, glorifying the saint’s righteousness, grace, wisdom and virtues, and drawing parallels to the most revered saints. The text is full of allusions to and quotations from biblical writings. Moreover, the overriding purpose of the text seems to have been the edification of the reader and listener of the Life, since the author eagerly and constantly explains the underlying meanings of the given quotations (such as ‘I, too, am dead to the world’ [Gal 6:14] means ‘I do not desire worldly needs’, p. 137) and interprets the subtle signs of holiness (such as for the milk that suddenly appeared where the saint stood, the author explains that ‘as for the interpretation of the milk, (it meant) ‘there will rise after him someone whose deeds will be tasty like milk’, p. 144). Five more posthumous miracles of different narrative style are appended to the Life, probably added at a later stage (ed. pp. 13–26, tr. pp. 154–159).

<sup>2</sup> Notably, three miracles (nos 36, 37, 39) are not related to the monastery but narrate episodes about three great kings: Lalibäla and his godson who eats nothing but earth, the prophecy of Nä'akkʷəto lä-Ab's kingship, and Zär'a Ya'qob who was admonished not to lean against a pillar in the church.

One of the very few biographical coordinates that we find in the hagiography is that the saint originally comes from ተጥራ of Määrwa<sup>5</sup> and that Bärtälomewos was a contemporary of St Täklä Haymanot, who clothed him with the askema<sup>6</sup>, and of St Yafqərənnä Ḥgzi, whom the protagonist met on the ተና-a-island of Məṣraha, as well as of Metropolitan Ya<sup>c</sup>qob (in office in the mid-fourteenth century), from whom he received the tabot of St Mary.<sup>7</sup> As is often the case with local saints, sources outside of their own monastic tradition providing information on their lives and deeds are scarce or even nonexistent. Therefore, it becomes difficult to evaluate the historicity of the given information,<sup>8</sup> even more when—as it seems here—a Life was composed many years after the lifetime of the protagonist.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>7</sup> St Bärtälomewos is mentioned neither in the Gädlä Yafqərənnä Ḥgzi edited by I. Wajnberg nor in the edited versions of the Gädlä Täklä Haymanot; cf. I. Wajnberg, ed., tr., Das Leben des Hl. Jäfgerana Ḥgzi (Weimar: Druck der Hof-Buchdruckerei, 1917; 2nd edn, Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 106 (Roma: Pont. Institutum Orientale Studiorum, 1936)); C. The life-story and the beauty of the combat of the great Ethiopian righteous Abunä Täklä Haymanot’*) (Addis Ababa: Bä-Tenša<sup>e</sup> Zä-Guba<sup>e</sup> Matämiya Bet Tatämä, 1946 EC (1953 CE)).

<sup>8</sup> The Editor’s conclusion—that Bärtälomewos was one of the monks who chastised King ደAMDÄ ሽዮን (r. 1314–1344) for ‘marrying the wife of his brother’ (pp. 116, 122)—may be arguable. The Life itself does not explicitly contain this information but merely refers to a ‘great oppression’ and the involvement of ‘twelve abbots’ during the reign of ደAMDÄ ሽዮን as an event that happened during the lifetime of Bärtälomewos (ed. p. 20, tr. p. 146).

<sup>9</sup> The saint’s age was taken from ‘a note found in the house of archives that the ancient fathers had kept’ (ed. p. 17, tr. p. 142).

The case of the Gädlä Yohannəs (ed. pp. 37–55, tr. pp. 166–189) is different; it seems to have been written shortly after the death of its protagonist. According to the embedded colophon (ed. p. 55, tr. p. 189), his successor Habtä Šellase commissioned the Life ‘that he heard with his ears and saw with his eyes because he has lived with him’.<sup>10</sup> The text offers more details on the saint’s life. We learn about his parents (both members of the military nobility), the miraculous birth of the firstborn saint and his education (biblical writings, arts of war, farming)—all typical hagiographical motifs. St Yohannəs received the ‘monastic garb’ from Abba Səm’on (from?) Təgray (አጥላዊ ከምሳን : ተግራይ :, p. 38)<sup>11</sup>, and the askema from Abba Eṣṭifanos of Däbrä Šəmbla. The latter left his monastery during famine, and Yohannəs was chosen as abbot. Yohannəs was later ordained priest by Metropolitan Gäbrä’el (in office together with Metropolitan Mika’el during the reign of King Zär’ā Ya’qob, r. 1434–1468). Finally, his spiritual father, Tätämqä Mädhən (he is sometimes given the epithet ‘of Mayä Wäyn’) sent his protégé to serve as an abbot at the tomb of Bärtälomewos.<sup>12</sup>

The Life includes thirteen miracles that the saint worked during his lifetime (ed. pp. 47–52, tr. pp. 178–185). All miracles were reported by his spiritual son, Gäbrä Maryam, ‘that he himself had seen and that he had heard from him’ (ed. p. 52, tr. p. 185). Eventually St Yohannəs died on 30 ወጪ in the same year as King Na’od (r. 1494–1508).

The Gädlä Bärtälomewos and the Gädlä Yohannəs—both local productions of the same monastery, which might have been written within the same period—bear close similarities in their use of hagiographical themes employed for portraying their saintly heroes. Neither saint ever acts on his own but is guided either by the will of God or by the instructions of a spiritual father. For example, the commonly employed theme ‘escape from marriage’ is pictured in such a way. The parents of both saints intended to arrange a marriage that was ultimately prevented by divine intervention: either the chosen wife (Bärtälomewos) or the parents (Yohannəs) died before the wedding. Another notable example is that both monks were recognized as a saint during their lifetime for changing water to milk (Bärtälomewos) or water to honey (Yohannəs). Furthermore, a dominant feature of both texts (as well as of

<sup>10</sup> The five additional posthumous miracles of St Bärtälomewos were most probably commissioned by the same Habtä Šellase (his name is mentioned in the supplication formula of the first additional miracle, p. 27).

<sup>11</sup> For this, both were imprisoned by the then abbot of Zämäddo, Abba Märqoryos, because they transgressed the order ‘that giving monasticism is forbidden to other abbots but to the abbot of Zämäddo’ (ed. p. 38, tr. p. 167).

<sup>12</sup> According to the second miracle of St Mary presented in Part Two, Yohannəs was the sixth abbot after Bärtälomewos (ed. p. 63, tr. p. 199).

Reviews

the miracles of Mary edited in Part Two) is the ambitious effort of the author(s) to consistently emphasise the truthfulness of the recounted episodes and miracles by referring to (saintly) ear- or eyewitnesses.<sup>13</sup>

It would be interesting to examine whether both saints enjoy liturgical veneration and are honoured with a commemorative notice in a local Sankössar of Däbrä Zämäddo since the memorial days are given for both saints (4 Təqəmt and 30 ኃመል). However, both Lives, together with the miracle stories provide extremely valuable material for the study of Ethiopic hagiography in general and of indigenous hagiography in particular. Also the edited collection of local miracles performed by St Mary (ed. pp. 62–112, tr. pp. 197–266) with inspirational stories of faith, and narratives about the people's daily life and its challenges, offers rich material for further research.

The publication under review reminds the scholarly community once again of the absolute necessity of a systematic and an overarching comparative study of Ethiopic hagiography, its thematic relationships and intertextualities, and of its common and specific motifs and elements, etc. The Editor has already contributed significantly to this endeavour in various ways for which he deserves the highest appreciation.

OSVALDO RAINERI, Vita del santo monaco etiopico Mälkē'a Krestos (sec. XVI–XVII). Edizione del testo etiopico e traduzione italiana, Patrologia Orientalis, 51/3 (228) (Turnhout: Brepols, 2010). 130 pp. (= 257–388). Price: € 48.00. ISBN: 978-2-503-53428-2.

This edition and translation of the Gädlä Mälkē'a Krəstos is now available in the Patrologia Orientalis series, thanks once more to the work of Msgr Osvaldo Raineri, who has edited several unpublished hagiographic works over the past years.

<sup>13</sup> For example from the Gädlä Bärtälomewos, 'However, this, that has been written, is what was revealed to the spiritual saints. As for the rest, those who had seen it openly have testified' (p. 148); from the Gädlä Yohannəs, 'this miracle was heard by people of that village and other villages' (p. 182). See also the passionately written concluding passage of the colophon of the local miracles of St Mary (ed. pp. 111–112, tr. p. 266) with a promise and a warning, 'And you, people of Zämäddo, do not treat it like fiction [...]. It will help you and rescue you from all tribulations of this world and the one to come. But if you ignore (the miracle worker), she will utterly destroy you from the life of body and soul'.
